Disappointing Easter after hot spell

16 April 2003

After the warmest spell of the year so far, and some record-breaking temperatures in the run up to Easter, Met Office forecasters are warning that Britain's weather is set to change again.

The change to colder wetter weather will, disappointingly, take place over the Easter weekend. Dry and sunny weather on Good Friday will give way to colder weather by Saturday with rain in some places during Easter Sunday.

There will also be a stiff easterly wind developing over the weekend, especially in the south and east where it will feel markedly colder for a while.
